

Approach the Bench

or Table or Chair at the State Law Library

Do you think only lawyers can use the Library of Michigan State Law Library? Objection overruled—the State Law Library is open to anyone. Whether you're an attorney planning to complete legal research or an average citizen who wants to learn more about a Michigan or federal statute, the State Law Library is the place for you.

Skilled professional reference librarians create a user-friendly atmosphere to help you find accurate, up-to-date information. While they can't give legal advice, they CAN locate statutes, court opinions, court rules, administrative regulations or other information.

William Bishop knows first-hand how great the State Law Library is—he's been researching the Michigan drain code there for over 2-1/2 years. "I had no legal experience and needed to learn more about case law and the drain code's legislative history," he says. "The staff offered me lots of help."
